Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from After Many Days: A Novel A Woodland glen into which the soft April sunshine streamed, through which a bright brook babbled, where graceful trees leaned over the water, and flowers of many kinds covered the ground like a carpet: on a flat stone at the foot of one of these trees a girl of sixteen sat dabbling a leafy branch in the current of the brook, and varying this amusement occasionally by leaning over to look at the water, which gave back a reflection of her face and of the white blossoms of a hawthorn which arched overhead. Near by, a boy, probably two years her senior, also sat, engaged in weaving, with remarkably dexterous fingers, a wreath of wild-flowers, which he had evidently gathered in the course of a long ramble. I don't think there's anything in the woods prettier than this crimson honeysuckle, Amy, he said. See what a vivid color it has! It is very pretty, said Amy, glancing up. But I care more for the sweetness than the color. Give me a spray, Hugh. Wait a minute, said Hugh, and you shall have the wreath. I am making it for you. I'll put a long, trailing spray behind. There, now! I call that picturesque! He extended the wreath at arms length, looked at it admiringly, then rose and laid it on his companion's head - a head covered with unruly masses of chestnut hair, in rich, curling waves. It's very becoming to you! he said, stepping backward for a better view, and nearly tumbling over an outspread root into the water. What a lovely Queen of...
