Excerpt: .This is only fair to the competitors, as many words vary in different lexicons, and, if not spelt according to one authority, are apt to cause bickering and unpleasantness. Having decided on the prizes, which are on show on the evening of the competition, you arrange with an impartial and well-educated person as interlocutor, and it is often as well to have an umpire, whose decision shall be final. On the evening of the contest the competitors are ranged in a half circle, the public being admitted to the proceedings at a fee of 6d., which will help to swell the funds of the charity, and the words are then put to each one in turn, no two competitors to be asked the same question, but each to have two tries, a black mark to go down to the one who does not spell the...
