An excerpt from the beginning of the PREFACE: THE uses of a Harmony of the Gospels are twofold: first to enable each reader to draw up for himself a connected narrative of our Lords History containing the fullest possible account that can be given: this I have endeavoured to do in my Gospel History, which I have published for the use of others. I have been surprised by the number of correspondents, both men and women, who have told me that they had attempted this, but had not time or patience enough to complete it, and have thanked me for doing it for them. The second use is to enable the reader, by seeing all the different accounts of each event before his eyes at the same moment, to judge how very few and unimportant the actual variations are, and how utterly mistaken are those persons who would represent the holy witnesses as contradicting each other in any essential matters. No two persons ever give precisely the same account of the same event; if they did their testimony would at once be open to the suspicion of having been made up and agreed upon beforehand; and the honest, independent witness of two or more would be reduced to the suspected testimony of one. In this Harmony, which follows the order of S. Luke and the same arrangement of sections as my Gospel History, I have endeavoured to set forth the parallel passages in a clearer and therefore more useful form than has generally been the case in similar publications; avoiding, at the cost of increased bulk, that snake-like wriggling about of the text which mars the beauty of...
